This is an absolutely riveting and at times harrowing dramatisation of the bizarre real-life story of Lindy Chamberlain, who claimed her baby was killed by a dingo at Ayers Rock in 1980.

"An entertaining and realistic novel about relationships, fatherhood, and interracial dating from the man's perspective."--Jacket.

About-A true story about the Author and the tragedy she faced as a teen into adulthood. Her challenges that eventually turned into lessons in her life that could have torn her apart at the very seams that were created to help her to survive. Little did she know that a mother's hate was not true love. This book was written to help other young girls to see their lives of pain in another way. That pain is just that "a 4-letter word". We all experience it. However, in this true story of a teen girl who went through so much pain that it was hard for her to see or experience nothing but that up until she aged to fifty. Pain followed her life through every door and every relationship. No relationship was more important than the love of her mother. As she worshiped the ground that her mother walked on and tried to prove her love and devotion to the woman who gave her life. Chantay realized that it was not all silver and gold but darkness from beginning to the end of her mother's life and the afterlife of her mother which affected her as well. It is hard to fathom that your mother does not love you, if you encounter that all your life then how do you cope? In Chantay's young life she never learned to cope. Well, the struggle to survive is one that will capture your heart. Angels are real and she is living proof.

The dying cry of Jesus as recorded in Mark's Gospel, 'My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?', has puzzled and inspired Christian thinkers and preachers through the ages. In the past it has raised questions about the historicity of the events of the cross, the identity of Jesus, and the meaning of atonement. In our present day, this cry has taken a central place in grappling with the problems of human suffering and in exploring the idea of the suffering of God. In this book Anthony Clarke brings together a careful exegesis of the Gospel text with a study of the way it has been used by four modern theologians: Jurgen Moltmann, Dorothee Solle, Eberhard Jungel and Hans Urs Von Balthasar. This leads him to conclusions about the vulnerability and justice of God which began to meet the challenge of doing theology after the Holocaust. He also draws practical implications about hope for both the Godless and the Godforsaken. Throughout, he shows the way that biblical study, theological think Recounts how the author was repeatedly sexually molested as a child by her seemingly respectable aerospace engineer father, her long and tortuous effort to come to terms with it, and her efforts on behalf of other women. Original.

A Cry Heard from the Darkness is a story of survival in the world powered by drugs. Dodie tells her personal journey that led her to the gates of hell ... and how she made her way back. She shares what it was like to be in darkest of dark places and cry out, only to learn God was listening. God heard her. If you feel trapped in a dark place and desperate for an answer, this book is a must read. Whether you associate with the drug lifestyle or not, this book is about every dark place and finding the path to redemption.
