Norwegians love their cabins. For a month we have not been able to visit our cabins, cottages, summer houses, whatever you call them, in fear of spread of the virus. Monday this week the ban was finally lifted, at least for now, yesterday Terje and I packed our car and drove the two hours out here, to our cabin paradise. It feels so good.

Cabins _ Life in the woods. Ever since Henry David Thoreau's described his two years, two months, and two days of cabin existence at Walden Pond, Massachusetts in Walden, or, Life in the Woods (1854), the idea of a refuge dwelling has seduced the modern psyche. In the past decade, as our material existence and environmental footprint has grown exponentially, architects around the globe have become particularly interested in the possibilities of the minimal, low-impact, and isolated abode.

From Newkirk: "The house reminds me of every fort I built in the woods as a kid growing up in Jackson, Mississippi." His parents visit every year and stay from July to October in another cabin that's also off-grid and without modern utilities. "I stress that, because they actually live off the grid full-time, and they are 75 years old.
