Not a good business model for Scope City, but I'm always grateful to that shop assistant. I guess maybe that's what happened to Scope City - though in fact, I guess it's the margins that got squeezed and running bricks and mortar outlets just aren't affordable for that sort of specialist shops. Edited by

1. The historical WACC is a calculation of firm's cost of capital over past years. It shows what returns were generated over those years, and shows how the capital market assessed the firm in those past years. The marginal cost of capital tells us the cost needed to raise the last dollar of capital. It is the minimum acceptable rate of return. In other ...
