Abstract. Teaching Language in Context takes the purposes for which language is used in different content areas as the starting point for teaching literacy. It recognises that students' understandings are constructed in language and that each area of the curriculum uses language in a different way. Success in each subject requires students to acquire the specialised language of the curriculum area; that is, the genres and language features through which the content is expressed.

This context will naturally be found in the language you are teaching. However, it will also arise from the circumstances in which you are teaching that language. You weave together the vocabulary, grammar, pronunciation, culture and usage of the language you are teaching. This combined context has to make sense to your students, encourage and excite them to reach beyond irregular verb memorization and grammar rules.

The importance of context for English teaching: experience, situation and surrounding language. By Tom Garside. Whenever we use language, whether we are speaking, listening, reading or writing, we do it in some kind of context. The situation we are in, the tone we want to express and the ways that others respond to us all affect the nature of the language choices that we make.

The importance of context for English teaching: experience ...

Contextualisation is putting language items into a meaningful and real context rather than being treated as isolated items of language for language manipulation practice only. Contextualising language tries to give real communicative value to the language that learners meet.

Teaching practice may take place in one or several very different contexts. For example, you might be teaching in a campus-based ESL program, in a local public school, in a community college, or a private language institute. Depending on the context, the learners you teach may be children, teenagers, or adults and may represent a variety of different social, economic, cultural, and educational backgrounds.
