The Magic Lantern. Bergman's first autobiography is a hugely revealing and honest piece of writing. 'Honest', however, doesn't necessarily mean 'truthful'. It serves as an interesting testimony, and as a literary piece of work it is genius. Dubious as a 'document', masterful as literature, the book has a non-chronological structure, with altering chapters on childhood, theatre work, the tax affair in 1976, marriage crises, teenage summers in Nazi Germany, encounters with artists like ...
