One of the pioneers in analysing and dignifying visual thinking was Rudolf Arnheim, a psychologist and philosopher born in Berlin in 1904, highly influenced by Gestalt psychology and Hermeneutics. For Arnheim, modern man is permanently harassed by the world of language and uses it too much to relate to the world.

Gestalt theory and the psychology of visual perception form the basis for an analysis of art and its basic elements

The 35th anniversary of this classic of art theory.

Thousands of readers who have profited from engagement with the lively mind of Rudolf Arnheim over the decades will receive news of this new collection of essays expectantly. In the essays collected here, as in his earlier work on a large variety of art forms, Arnheim explores concrete poetry and the metaphors of Dante, photography and the meaning of music. There are essays on color composition, forgeries, and the problems of perspective, on art in education and therapy, on the style of artists’ late works, and the reading of maps. Also, in a triplet of essays on pioneers in the psychology of art (Max Wertheimer, Gustav Theodor Fechner, and Wilhelm Worringer) Arnheim goes back to the roots of modern thinking about the mechanisms of artistic perception.

The tension between two systems for understanding and picturing space, the concentric and the Cartesian, is regarded by the author as the key to composition in painting, sculpture and architecture

“ More than half a century since its initial publication, this deceptively compact book remains among the most incisive analyses of the formal and perceptual dynamics of cinema. No one who cares about film can afford to remain ignorant of its insights and wisdom. As digital technology fundamentally alters motion pictures, the lessons of Film as Art commend themselves as excellent insurance against reinventing the wheel in the new media landscape and hailing it as progress. ” —Edward Dimendberg author of Film Noir and the Spaces of Modernity “ After more than eight decades, Rudolph Arnheim’s small book of film theory remains one of the essential works in defining film art, understanding film less as reproducing the world than as opening up new possibilities for formal play and unexpected imagery. Anyone serious about film, whether scholar, filmmaker or simply a lover of cinema, must take Arnheim seriously. ” —Tom Gunning, author of The Films of Fritz Lang and D.W. Griffith and the Origins of American Narrative Film “ An aesthetic theory based on the formal ‘ limitations ’ of the medium, Arnheim ’ s Film as Art always provokes students in an age of few limits and less formality, and they argue and engage this classic text with unparalleled passion. Written in the wake of sound ’ s transformation of the cinema, Arnheim ’ s essays are not only central to understanding a major historical moment in theoretical debates about what constitutes the ‘ essence ’ of film, but also are a must read for anyone seeking a lucid, detailed, and rigorous argument about how works of art emerge from expressive constraint as much as expressive freedom. ” —Vivian Sobchack, author of Carnal Thoughts

Psychology.

For many years Rudolf Arnheim, known as the leading psychologist of art, has been keeping notebooks in which to jot down observations, ideas, questions, and even (after a stay in Japan for a year) poems in the haiku pattern. Some of these notes found their way into his books—known and prized the world over—such as Art and Visual Perception, Visual Thinking, and The Power of the Center (see list below). Now he has selected, from the remaining riches of his notebooks, the items in this volume. The book will be a joy to ramble through for all lovers of Arnheim’s work, and indeed for anyone who shares Arnheim’s contagious interest in the order that lies behind art, nature, and human life. It is a seedbed of ideas and observations in his special fields of psychology and the arts. “I have avoided mere images and I have avoided mere thoughts,” says Arnheim in the Introduction, “but whenever an episode observed or a striking sentence read yielded a piece of insight I had not met before, I wrote it down and preserved it.” There are also glimpses of his personal life—his wife, his cats, his students, his neighbors and colleagues. He is always concrete, in the manner that has become his trademark, often witty, and sometimes a bit wicked. In the blend of life and thought caught in these jottings, psychology and the arts are of course prominent. But philosophy, religion, and the natural sciences add to the medley of topics—always addressed in a way to sharpen the senses of the reader who, sharing Arnheim’s cue from Dylan Thomas, may accompany him through “the parables of sun light and the legends of the green chapels and the twice told fields of childhood.” All of Rudolf Arnheim’s books have been published by the University of California Press.

This essay is an attempt to reconcile the disturbing contradiction between the striving for order in nature and in man and the principle of entropy implicit in the second law of thermodynamics - between the tendency toward greater organization and the general trend of the material universe toward death and disorder.
